Often I think of our work as being centered on justice. This year I felt our watchword was also freedom.

The freedom to travel anywhere in the world—including Cuba.
The freedom to organize, investigate abuses, and speak out, without having your government spy upon you, as in, among other places, Colombia.
The freedom to cross borders, to immigrate.
The freedom to publish and protest, now restricted in Honduras.
The freedom to dream of, and try to build, a just world.

We’ve had some victories this year—restoring the rights of Cuban Americans to travel, and convincing our government that Colombia’s spying scandal matters. But we’ve lots left to do, working together for justice. And freedom.

2009 ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Cuba: Travel for All

- Coordinated CubaGO! - a day of educational Hill visits on ending the ban on travel to Cuba for ALL Americans, and a national call-in day that generated more than a thousand calls to Congress from around the country. The Hill day consisted of 75 Americans from diverse sectors, divided into 14 delegations, educating 60 members of Congress and senators from ten states on the need to open travel to Cuba. CubaGO! (www.cubago.info) is a project of LAWG and a group of allied organizations working to increase dialogue and exchange with Cuba.

- Launched an innovative social networking campaign to promote policy change toward Cuba, including an “End the Travel Ban on Cuba” Facebook page, an “EndtheTravelBan” Twitter account, and new LAWG blog posts and website initiatives.
Hosted and organized a series of delegations to Washington, DC, to promote unrestricted travel to Cuba, including Church World Service mission directors; the Emergency Network of Cuban American Scholars and Artists (ENCASA); the Moderator and staff of the Presbyterian Church (USA); a Jewish and Cuban-American delegation; the President of the Jewish community of Cienfuegos, Cuba, and local Jewish leaders.

Solicited and placed more than ten op-eds in local and regional newspapers across the nation by Americans supporting engagement with Cuba.

Participated on a cultural exchange panel with Danny Glover, Septime Webre (artistic director of the Washington Ballet), James Early (Smithsonian Institute), Viengsay Valdés (prima ballerina of the Ballet Nacional de Cuba), and other cultural leaders, organized by the U.S.-Cuba Cultural Exchange.
Mexico: Justice for Mexico and the Borderlands

- With Mexican human rights groups and the Washington Office on Latin America (WOLA), extensively documented rising abuses by the Mexican security forces, demanding enforcement of the Merida Initiative’s human rights provisions, directly and via grassroots actions. While the provisions have not yet been invoked, we placed our governments on notice, began to increase congressional oversight, and laid the basis for future enforcement.

- Testified before the U.S. House of Representatives on rising cartel violence in Mexico, calling for the United States to support justice initiatives but end funding that dangerously brings the army into the streets. LAWGEF challenged U.S. policymakers to make sure we do our part by curbing the flow of weapons from the United States to Mexico and expanding drug treatment programs at home.

- Coordinated with WOLA events for three experts on an alternative strategy to address drug-related violence in Mexico, by improving Mexico’s policing through community approaches with greater citizen involvement and oversight, with meetings at the State Department, Congress and the Woodrow Wilson Center.

- Organized with the Border Working Group statements of concern over the rise in abuses, kidnappings, and murders of migrants traveling northward.

- Organized grassroots responses with a coalition of groups against border fences that just push migrants farther into the desert where migrant deaths are on the rise. An amendment was dropped from the final Homeland Security appropriations bill, marking the first-ever defeat of counterproductive border construction.

Colombia: Standing with the Victims of Violence

- Organized with WOLA a delegation of human rights activists and a journalist who had been the focus of illegal surveillance by the Colombian government, and brought them to meet at high levels with the National Security Council, Pentagon, State Department, and congressional committees. As a result of our efforts to expose the wiretapping scandal, President Obama raised the issue with the President of Colombia and Congress placed some provisions in law restricting funding to the agency that had conducted the spying.

Through meetings, letters, memos, and organized grassroots efforts, directed at every angle from the White House and State Department to the Pentagon and US Trade Representative, called on the new administration to create a new policy towards Colombia centered on justice and human rights.

When the Colombian government tried to whitewash its image by placing heart-shaped statues around DC during the first week of the congressional fall session, our coalition used pickets and street theater to get out the truth about what’s really going on in Colombia.

Participated with faith-based and grassroots groups in Days of Prayer and Action, where people unleashed their creativity through paper dolls, sent to policymakers, that represented Colombia’s invisible millions of displaced people.

Honduras: Saying No to Repression

- Organized statements by faith-based, policy, humanitarian and grassroots groups opposing the June 28th coup in Honduras and calling on our government to insist upon the restoration of the elected government and speak out on violations of human rights and civil liberties.

- Organized with other groups an emergency delegation from Honduras, including a human rights activist, member of Congress and judicial expert, to speak to Congress and the administration.

- Ensured a steady drumbeat of information to policymakers about violations of human rights and freedom of expression in Honduras through regular memos synthesizing Honduran and international human rights and press freedom reports and articles.

* This list includes some of the groups participating. Participation does not imply endorsement of all LAWG/LAWGEF efforts. Decisions to endorse statements and campaigns are made on a case-by-case basis by each participating organization.
